

What are the tropic of capricorn and the tropic of cancer?

Earth Science ▸ Earth's Surface ▸ Location, Longitude, and Latitude

1 Answer

Katie

Jan 16, 2015

The tropic of capricorn and the tropic of cancer are both lines that run horizontally along the earth, parallel to the equator.

They are used to help measure distance on earth. They are also parallel latitudes indicating global positions. The sun is only directly overhead on the tropics on a solstice.

The tropic of cancer is on the top of the equator, you can remember its on top because CAN comes before CAP alphabetically.

Tropics

Answer link

Related questions

How do you find the latitude and longitude of a city?

Explain how latitude and longitude are used?

What is latitude?

What is the prime meridian?

What is the prime meridian?

Is the prime meridian a line of longitude or latitude?

How do lines of latitude change as they get further from the equator?

How do lines of longitude change as they get further from the prime meridian?

How are longitude lines and time zones related?

What characterizes the area between the two tropics?

See all questions in Location, Longitude, and Latitude

Impact of this question

75164 views around the world

You can reuse this answer
Creative Commons License